Red Oak Church to Mark 125 Years

To most people Red Oak is that sleepy settlement of 60 people living on High Street (or Red Oak Road) a few miles west of Cedarville. Historically speaking, it once had a grade school, a busy railroad depot and a pit responsible for most of the bricks in Cedarville's brick buildings. Those landmarks are all gone.

Some people would say there's not much to celebrate in Red Oak, but the several dozen members of the Red Oak Methodist Church would strongly disagree as they enthusiastically mark the 125th anniversary of their congregation.

Marlene Barker, the unofficial historian of the church, proudly told me that the church celebrated its official birthday on July 31 and it will double up on Sunday, August 21. That's when the Northern Illinois bishop, the district superintendent and members of the Cedarville United Methodist Church will come to Red Oak for a 9 a.m. joint celebration led by Rev. Betty Mixon, who currently serves both churches. The program will include the dedication of the recently completed handicapped accessible fellowship hall.

What's the history behind the Red Oak Church?

Marlene Barker meticulously ticked off the highlights. It was organized on July 31, 1891, in the S. E. Crowell home. Rev. J. H. Hicks was the minister, the first of 39, until 1894. One name, Rev. John L. Dickson, 1920, caught my eye. He was my wife's grandfather.

Mathew Meyers, owner of the Meyers Brothers Lumber Yard in Scioto Mills, in 1891 donated the half acre on the southeast corner of Pleasant Street and High Street for the church building. Construction started on September 19 of that year and the cornerstone was laid by Rev. Hicks at 2 p.m. on October 31.

The building was to be 26 feet by 40 feet. The mason work was by J. Ripperman at 30 cents a perch (a high station from which to work from) and he donated $5. Carpenter work was performed by Samuel Pifer for $195. Pifer Brothers did the painting for $1.73 per day and they donated one day of painting each. The lumber cost was $300.

Mrs. Barker continued reciting: The church bell weighs 400 pounds. The first organ was bought from the Allington Organ Co., Freeport, for $60. The first insurance was with the German Insurance Co., Freeport. Finally, the entire cost of the original church, bell and woodshed was $1,650.

As time went on, improvements were made. Again, from Mrs. Barker: Wood for heating was donated by church members. The first lighting system was oil lamps. A gas light tube system with a (Turn to page 4)

The tank, generator and two chandeliers was installed in 1913 for $52.25. The first furnace cost $125.32 in 1915 with the chimney costing $153.84. Coal was $6 a ton.

Moving from long-ago operating expense numbers to personal numbers, Mrs. Barker said: There were hitching posts for horses and people came by horse or walked from as far away as 20 miles. At one time, ministers were paid by food and donated money. Their horses also received some food. In 1920 a minister’s annual salary was $55 and in 1935 it was $175. There were 37 active members in 1896. The number grew to 62 in 1940.

Currently there are no children who attend services at the Red Oak Church. Mrs. Barker said, “We had as many as 17 children in Sunday school in past years, but for the last two years we have had no classes. We do have six children who come with their parents.” She added, We keep an open mind for future Sunday school classes if there will be a need.”

Despite its small membership, the church is active and concerned with day to day problems. The members contribute to missionary causes, the church can be used by students and their tutors for academic purposes and it can be the setting for marriages. “We are open to help wherever we can,” Mr. Barker said.

To some, it would appear the Red Oak Methodist Church is a relic of the past. Closer examination proves that is not true.

In 2011 some of the parishioners built a handicapped accessible ramp to the church.

In 2015 the church received grants and donations that helped transform an empty back room that had no electricity, water or heat into a handicapped accessible fellowship hall with a handicapped accessible bathroom. As mentioned earlier in this article, the hall will be dedicated on August 21.

Just completed was a handicapped accessible outdoor deck off the back of the church.

A picture of both the church entry ramp and the outdoor deck can be seen in photos accompanying this article.

The church is moving on, but there is still some remnants of the past that remain.

Mrs. Barker concluded: “We still use the 400 pound bell from 1891. It is rung every Sunday morning before church starts. Everyone in Red Oak can hear it. Any children we have in church that Sunday can take turns ringing the bell.”

Moving on, but a nice touch of yesterday.

Hot Barbershop Night Draws 65

It was hot outside but pleasantly cool in the museum’s second floor LeRoy Wilson Theater Tuesday evening, July 19, when members of the barbershop quartet “One Quart Low” burst into their special harmonies. The full house gave a great reception to the return visit of the quartet of Bart Macomber, Carl Heintz, son Nate and father Jerry Hyland.
