Cole As Frederick Douglass July 15

Freeport historian Steve Cole will re-enact the pre-Civil War Stephenson County visit of abolitionist Frederick Douglass when he speaks Tuesday, July 15, at the Cedarville Museum.

The 7:30 p.m. program is open to Cedarville Area Historical Society members and the public. Admission is $7 for those not already holding a ticket purchased in advance.

The program will be held in the museum’s air conditioned second floor LeRoy Wilson Theater. The museum has an elevator for physically handicapped visitors. Free refreshments will be served after the 45 minute program.

Douglass, African American orator, spoke in 1854 in the county’s old courthouse. He had been invited by prominent local abolitionists John Addams, Oscar Taylor and Dexter Knowlton.

Last year’s severe winter took its toll on the evergreen to the south of the museum’s east entrance. Thanks to the expert pruning of Dave DeMeester, new growth over the next two years is expected to return the tree to the flame-like shape of its sister tree to the north of the doorway. Dave’s company is also responsible for our insect-free museum and our largely weed-free green lawn.

Tornado Season Brings Memories of June 1944

(Tornadoes have ripped through the United States this year, but to date Stephenson County has been spared. This was not the case in June 1944 as related in the 1970 history of Stephenson County.)

On June 22, 1944, a funnel swooped down near Winslow and cut a path for eighteen miles, crossing the corners of Oneida and Waddams townships, plowing across Buckeye and into Dakota.

Three persons were killed: Mrs. Glenn Hutchinson, Thomas Cummings and Deputy Sheriff Kenneth Adams. More that a dozen were injured, several severely. Seven persons were killed in southern Wisconsin.

All the buildings were destroyed on eight Stephenson County farms. Buildings, trees and most of the herd of prize Holsteins belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Ray Angle were destroyed except the part of the dwelling in which Mr. Angle was. Mrs. Angle was caught under a refrigerator which was in turn under a part of the roof.

Mr. Angle performed one of those impossible feats by lifting the roof and dragging his wife to safety. Her injuries were painful but not severe. In spite of their advanced years, the Angles like their neighbors, rebuilt.

Just Who Was Frederick Douglass?

(To aid those attending Steve Cole's July 15 Cedarville Museum program on Frederick Douglass, the editor thought some background information would be helpful.)

Frederick Douglass (1818-1895) was an African-American social reformer, orator, writer and statesman. After escaping from slavery, he became a leader of the abolitionist movement, gaining note for his dazzling oratory and incisive antislavery writing. He stood as a living counterexample to slaveholders' arguments that slaves lacked the intellectual capacity to function as independent American citizens.

Douglass worked with many notable abolitionists of the nineteenth century including Wendell Phillips and Abby Kelley. Douglass also had a close relationship with John Brown but disagreed with Brown's violent tactics, dramatically displayed in Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry in 1859. With the abolition of slavery at the close of the Civil War, Douglass then turned his attention to the full integration of the African-American into political and economic life of the United States.

Douglass established his own weekly abolitionist newspaper, the North Star that became a major voice of African-American opinion. Later, through his periodical titled the Douglass Monthly, he recruited black Union soldiers for the 54th Massachusetts Volunteers. His two sons both served in this regiment and saw combat.

Douglass served as advisor to presidents. Abraham Lincoln referred to him as the most meritorious man of the nineteenth century. In his later years Douglass was appointed to several offices by Presidents Hayes, Garfield, Harrison and Grant.

Douglass had hoped that his appointments would open doors for other African-Americans, but it was many years before they would follow in his footsteps.

Beside his work on behalf of African-Americans, he also strongly supported the feminist movement.

John “Jack” Martocci Jr. of Rockford toured the Cedarville Museum June 17 to learn more about Jane Addams and Chicago’s Hull House, a favorite destination of his father and his two brothers in the 1920s. During that time John Sr., who was born in 1906 and was the son of an Italian immigrant who arrived in the United States from Naples in 1897, served as an assistant treasurer of the Hull-House board even though he was only in his late teens, according to his son. John Sr., who lived on Polk Street near the Hull-House complex, was employed by General Electric Company. John Jr. said his father and his older brother, Rocco, and his younger brother, Anthony, took advantage of many Hull-House educational and vocational programs that were offered to recent immigrants. John Sr. died in 1967.
